Bad Woman Turns From Wicked Life

Remarkable Transformation Religion Has Made in the Career of "Sister Tyler."

known for two years to her co-workers of Brooklyn as Sister Tyler is known in her home life as Mrs. William Tyler She lives in a little cottage in Williamsburg, happy in her renewal of domestic life, the break-ling up of which, years ago, led to the remarkable career from which she finally turned to the work of salvation.

"I was only I when I married." said Sister Tyler, "and I would have been happy had not my parents, believing me too young for wifehood, parted me from my husband.

I ran away from home and started for the Northwest, and soon fell in with Kate, the Cattle-Thief. the most notorious woman of that section. For years I led a life of danger and outlawry. Kate was a desperate character. I liked the free, wild life and neither realized nor cared for the shame of it.

Quit Kate, the Cattle Thief.

"One day I suddenly resolved to leave Kate and her band, and without more ado I started for northern Michigan. The very next day Kate was shot in an encounter with cattle-owners.

"In Michigan I opened a saloen. It was near the Sioux reservation and I did much traffic with the Indians. I made money in this way until one of the chiefs fell in love with me. I lured him on until I got tired of him, and then turned him away.

The next night I heard the tread of many feet that told me the Indians had come to my cabin in a body. Feering out of the window, I could see them circle around the place, while the chief whom I had cast off took up a station near the door. I expected an attack any moment, but finally the warriors went away, leaving my chief alone there.

Then, slipping out of a rear window, I stole away.

through the lower part of the back by some would-be assassin, who sneaked up to the open bedroom window and fired at the forms stretched upon the bed only a few feet away. Mrs. Stevens was lying nearest to the window.

Dr. Bond, who was called, found that the bullet had entered the lower end of the spine and, ranging upward, made its exit six inches above. The doctor thinks she was lying in a drawn-up position, which prevented the bullet from entering the body and inflicting a mortal wound. Mrs. Stevens is expected to recover.

In front of the Stevens house, which is located at 90 Ohlo street, there are traces of a vehicle which had been driven up during the night, but James Perry, a neighbor, who ran quickly to the scene of the shooting, saw no one leaving the premises. A watchful hound belonging to Mr. Stevens was tied up Thursday night for the first time in weeks. Ended Her Gambling Career.

"One night I played with a young man who had lost much. He staked his last 1500 on the turn of a card. Before the cards were turned he told me that he had stolen the money from one of his family and that, win or lose, he was determined to take the stakes.

"I won. He drew his revolver, but I was quicker and fired first. As my finger pulled the trigger some one knocked my orm up and the builet pierced the ceiling. That ended my career there.

"I returned to Brooklyp, where I opened a gambling place. I had many women among my patrons and did a thriving business.

One night two years ago I dropped into a mission through curiesity and heard the word of the Lord. It was like a flood of light into my soul.

"I went home and threw out of the window every drop of the store of liquor I had kept for my patrons. After that went the cards. I began a new life, and every day of my life I thank God for the salvation he has offered me."

On April II a wan, wasted girl of 2s was brought in suffering in the last stages of a complication of diseases, of which consumption and heart failure formed the components. Run down by dissipation and with constitution wrecked by drink, the doctors knew that she would never leave the institution alive. When asked her name she said that she was May Brophy and that her home was W. Mackel. Frank Coffee and wife, J. A. Dathle, Sydney, N. S. W.; James Ridman, Montpeller; R. E. would never leave the institution alive. When asked her name she said that she was May Brophy and that her home was sat 215 East Ninety-seventh street, whereher aunt, Mrs. Kate Brophy, lives.

Yesterday afternoon the superintendent was notified that the girl's death was a matter of hours, and Mrs. Brophy was notified. She hurried to the hospital in ignorance that any one near to her lay there. When she saw the dying girl Mrs. Brophy recognized in her May Manly, whom she had not seek for five years, at which time the pretty girl had disappeared from her home.

"Mother—oh, I want to see mother before I die," wept the girl. A messenger was sent in a cab for the mother. Mrs. Manly fainted when told that her daughter had been found only to be again taken away from her. She was carried in a scarcely conscious condition to the cab, and hurried at the top of the horse's speed for Bellevue.

At the hospital they hurried her through the ward to the spot where the white screens stretched around the cit. The girl in her death agony heard the hurrying steps and the Sobs of her mother. "My mother" she cried. Her eyes did not greet the distracted woman. May Manly died as her mother's feet passed the threshold of the ward. The New Wilson.

SCIENTIFIC KNOWLEDGE REGARDING THE RAIN

"Where did this rain come from was the question addressed to Weather Forecaster R. J. Hyatt yesterday aftersoon, as the big drops began to pelt the sidewalk.

Dr. Hyatt did not attempt to parry or evade the questions, as a less competent observer would have done, nor did he reply in vague generalities. Without a moment's hesitation he said "After years of scientific study and observation of the forces of nature, I feel that I am qualified to enlighten you and I have no hesitation in giving you the assurance, defiant alike of hos-tile criticism and contradiction, that this rain comes from the clouds." this rain comes from the clouds."

The offices of the weather bureau in the Dooly black are to be enlarged on July 1 by the addition of two rooms adjoining the three already occupied. In the new offices will be shelving for a great number of glass jars containing samples of different kinds of weather and a laboratory for mixing them and devising new combinations. Dr. Hyatt says that we are to have showers and cooler weather. He ex-pects both today, but, if not today, they are sure to come later
